USC Upstate Chancellor named president of the Big South Conference

Adapted from information provided by USC Upstate

University of South Carolina Upstate Chancellor Bennie L. Harris, Ph.D., has been elected president of the Big South Conference for the 2025–26 and 2026–27 academic years, making history as the first USC Upstate chancellor to serve in the role

The appointment was unanimously approved by the Big South Conference of Chief Council Executive Officers. Harris had been serving as vice president of the Executive Committee since 2023 and took over as interim president in February 2025. His election to the top post affirms the trust of his fellow leaders and highlights his growing influence in collegiate athletics and higher education.

"I am honored to serve as president of the Big South Conference and to work alongside my colleagues in shaping the future of our league," Harris said in a statement. "The Big South plays a vital role in developing student-athletes who lead both on and off the field. I look forward to continuing this important work."

Joining Harris on the conference's Executive Committee are High Point University President Nido Qubein, who will serve as vice president, and Longwood University President W. Taylor Reveley IV, reelected as an at-large member. The Executive Committee handles governance decisions and acts as the appeals body for penalties issued by the commissioner.

Since his appointment as

USC Upstate's fifth chancellor in 2021, Harris has helped elevate the university's mission, visibility, and commitment to student success. His leadership has coincided with a period of athletic achievement for the university. During the 2024-25 season, USC Upstate secured its best-ever finish in the Sasser Cup standings placing third overall—and claimed four Big South championships.

The Big South Conference includes nine full-time member institutions across North Carolina, South Carolina, and Virginia. Its member schools are Charleston Southern, Gardner-Webb, High Point, Longwood, Presbyterian, Radford, UNC Asheville, USC Upstate, and Winthrop. The conference sponsors 19 championship sports.

USC launches South Carolina's premier center for civic leadership and thought

By Bryan Gentry, brgentry @sc.edu, 803-576-7650

The University of South Carolina is creating a new academic center to promote broad understanding of the core ideals and values that have shaped American government and history. The Center for American Civic Leadership and Public Discourse will generate scholarship and new academic programs exploring ordered liberty, democratic self-governance, rule of law and unalienable rights, while also promoting bipartisan discussion of the critical issues facing our nation and state.

The Board of Trustees approved the new center unanimously on June 20, and planning for public events and academic programs supporting its mission is underway.

"Studying the American civic order and teaching our students to be good citizens should be a core function of higher education in America," said Thad Westbrook, chair of the USC Board of Trustees. "With the upcoming 250th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, this is a great opportunity for the University of South Carolina to launch a new effort to contribute scholarship on American democracy and lead the way in our state in educating South Carolinians in America's founding principles. Over the past few years, we have strengthened our policies supporting free speech on campus, and we believe this center will elevate that work with a renewed focus on civil discourse."

The center responds to a growing need for civil discourse, cooperation across partisan lines, and a greater understanding of the core ideals and values that shaped America.

"Embodied in our educational mission is a commitment to preparing USC's students to succeed and lead in every facet of their lives beyond graduation," USC President Michael Amiridis said. "The value this new academic center brings is its focus on equipping students with the knowledge, perspectives, and reasoning skills for meaningful interactions as citizens and community leaders."

Numerous studies and surveys reveal that Americans have less trust in government and each other than in the past. Too many of our citizens lack a basic understanding of American government, which is particularly worrisome when political polarization is prevalent throughout our nation.

Housed in the McCausland College of Arts and Sciences, the Center for American Civic Leadership and Public Discourse will help USC contribute to the national dialogue on issues in American democracy through highly respected scholars, hosting national and state leaders, and public discussions with students, faculty, staff, and South Carolina community members of varying backgrounds and political viewpoints.

Christopher Tollefsen, a professor of philosophy who studies ethics and natural law, will serve as the center's interim executive director in its first year. Other USC faculty affiliated with the center include scholars of history, political science, sociology, law and education.

The center has a board of external advisors that include Robert P. George of Princeton University, Cornel West of Union Theological Seminary, Julia Mahoney of the University of Virginia, Paul Carrese of Arizona State University, and Mary Keys of the University of Notre Dame.

"From its beginning, the Center for American Civic Leadership and Public Discourse will help students and citizens in South Carolina truly grasp the ideas and values that have both inspired and challenged Americans of each generation," Tollefsen said. "Our academic programs, publications and public events will bring together people of diverse backgrounds and beliefs to better understand America's past and prepare to shape its future.'

For its first public event, on Sept. 12 the center will welcome advisory board members Robert P. George and Cornel West, who are well-known for their collaboration and friendship, despite their disagreement on many issues. On Sept.17, the center will host Emory legal scholar John Witte for a Constitution Day lecture about religious freedom.

The center has received key approval from the Commission on Higher Education's academic affairs and licensing committee pending final approval. Future events will address topics such as South Carolina's contributions to America's founding, the rule of law, ethics, history and more.

The center will support existing academic programs, such as the minor in Law and Society and courses on America's founding documents, while exploring new academic offerings.

For more information about the center, visit go.sc.edu/CivicLeadership.

7 things doctors wish families knew this back-to-school season

(StatePoint) As you prepare children to return to the classroom this fall, the American Medical Association (AMA) has seven tips to help your family have a healthy school

"As you purchase school supplies and prepare the students in your family for academic success, you can take concrete steps that prioritize physical and mental health, too," said AMA President Bobby Mukkamala, M.D. "A healthy start can set the tone for a strong, successful year ahead."

1. Ultra-processed foods are associated with health risks. Many busy families rely on ultra-processed foods due to their convenience. However, consuming these foods regularly increases the risk of health complications, including cardiovascular disease, certain cancers, obesity and type 2 diabetes. Read nutrition labels carefully with attention to sodium, saturated fat and added sugar, shop the perimeter of the grocery store where fresh, whole foods tend to be located, and prepare meals that prioritize whole foods, including fruits and vegetables, for growing children and adults.

2. Eating disorders are misunderstood. This silent epidemic affects people of all ages and backgrounds, striking at the core of their physical and mental well-being. Despite its widespread impact, the gravity of eating disorders often remains private, leaving many to battle the condition silently. If you believe your child or teenager has an eating disorder, their physician can direct you to helpful resources.

3. Ensure your vaccinations are up to date. Vaccinations help protect you and your family against severe disease and disability, and save millions of lives each year. Check with your physician during the back-to-school season to ensure everyone in the family is up to date on vaccinations. When respiratory virus season starts later in the fall, get up to date on the influenza vaccine to help reduce time away from school or work.

4. Norovirus is very contagious, but preventable. It seems everyone has experienced the sudden turn of the stomach, causing a mad rush to the bathroom due to vomiting, diarrhea or both. And, unfortunately, remaining near the bathroom may be the only plan for the next day or two. The most likely culprit is norovirus, and it can happen to anyone. When buying school supplies, stock up on cleaning supplies as well so you can keep frequently touched surfaces sanitized. Model good hand-washing habits for your children. Keep children with norovirus symptoms home from school for at least 2 days (48 hours) after symptoms stop to help prevent the spread of the virus.

5. Too much screen time is bad for health. People are on their devices more than ever before. But too much screen time can have negative mental and physical health effects and increase feelings of loneliness. The start of a new school year is a good time to replace screen time with other activities, such as after school clubs and sports, playdates, quality family time and sleep.

6. Eye health is essential. Don't take eye health for granted. Fall is a good time for an ophthalmologist checkup. If your tween or teen wears contacts, be sure that they wash their lenses and lens case and take their lenses off at night. Frequent computer breaks, wearing sunglasses, and a healthy diet can also promote good eye health. 7. Sleep is important for overall health. From school stress to illnesses, many factors can interfere with a good night's sleep. Instituting a consistent sleep routine for the entire family is a good start. For teens, 8-10 hours of sleep is recommended, and children aged 6-12 should be getting 9-12 hours of sleep. Consider consulting a physician for persistent sleep issues to determine whether they're caused by a sleep disorder and to get help.
