Pacolet WWII veteran who received France's highest honor dies at 100

By: Skylar Laird, SC Daily Gazette, www.scdailygazette.com
November 11, 2025

Before he sold furniture in South Carolina, Cecil Hart survived a German U-Boat attack and fought to liberate northern France during World War II.

For Hart's service during the war, he received France's highest honor in a ceremony earlier this year. Hart died Oct. 30, just over a month after receiving the medal, at 100 years old, said his son, Curtis Hart.

Originally from a cotton farm in Pacolet, a small town in Spartanburg County, Cecil Hart enlisted in the Army in 1943 as an ambulance driver.

"One day, he was working that farm, and the next day, he was in France," his son, Curtis Hart, told the SC Daily Gazette on Tuesday, September 11.

Fighting in World War II

Growing up, all Curtis Hart knew about his father's time in the war came from the military yearbooks his father kept. Although Hart asked his father questions about his service abroad, like many World War II veterans, he didn't want to talk about it, Hart said.

That changed when Cecil Hart, in his 90s, went on an Honor Flight trip to Washington, D.C., his son said.

For years, Cecil Hart resisted a friend's invitations to go on the trip because he didn't like having too much attention on himself. Knowing how much Hart would get out of the trip, the friend finally told him, "You can go peacefully or another way," Curtis Hart recalled.

During the several days Cecil Hart spent in D.C. with other veterans, he toured monuments and received thanks for his service. Cleaning out his father's house over the past week, Curtis Hart found all the pamphlets and other memorabilia his father received on the trip, which was unusual for a man who didn't much like clutter, he said.

"I think that was the first time in his life that he really realized what he'd been a part of," Hart said.

After he came home, Cecil Hart began to talk a little more about his experiences during the war. But it was after he learned about the application for the Legion of Honor Medal that he really started to open up, Curtis Hart said.

"It brought back a lot of memories he had about the war," Hart said. "Some were good, and some were not good."

Cecil Hart thought many of his memories were better left forgotten, his son said. The veteran recalled having very little food to eat and seeing fellow soldiers suffering from illness and injuries.

At one point, Cecil Hart survived an attack from a German submarine that killed most of his division while crossing the English Channel, according to the Consulate General of France in Atlanta, which presented the award. He fought in northern France on D-Day, in an invasion that left an estimated 4,000 Allied troops dead, with more wounded or missing.

Hart left the Army in 1946, having earned the rank of private first class. He received a number of medals for his service, including a Good Conduct Medal, which recognizes excellent behavior and efficiency, according to the consulate.

Hart also received the WWII Victory Medal, which was given to all veterans who fought in the war; the American Theater Ribbon, given to soldiers in WWII who saw active combat or other dangerous conditions; and the European-African-Middle Eastern Theater Medal, for those who served in that area, with one Bronze Service Star, according to the consulate.

"We were very proud to be able to add a French Legion of Honor Medal to this list," said Anne-Laure Desjonquères, the region's consul general.

Even though his father often found it difficult to recount his experiences, Curtis Hart was grateful to learn more about his father.

In the months leading up to the ceremony, the younger Hart listened to his father's stories, taking notes so he would remember everything that happened.

To see his father recognized "meant a tremendous amount to us, mainly for his sake," Hart said. "We were really happy for him."

The Legion of Honor Medal

Cecil Hart's daughter-in-law accepted the medal on his behalf during a Sept. 12 ceremony on Hilton Head Island because Hart, who died of congenital heart failure, was too sick to attend. The consulate tailors ceremonies to each veteran's wishes, and Hart asked for a small recognition with friends and family, Desjonquères said.

The award, which Napoleon Bonaparte established in 1802, recognizes both French citizens and foreign nationals who contributed to France or upheld its ideals. For about 20 years, French officials have worked to track down World War II veterans who fought on French soil to recognize their part in ending the war, Desjonquères said.

"Our objective is to show that France doesn't forget what it owes to the veterans who fought to liberate our country and Europe," Desjonquères said.

Notable recipients of the award include Dwight Eisenhower, the World War II general and U.S. president; and Josephine Baker, the performer, World War II spy and Civil Rights Movement activist.

For the most part, the consulate hears about veterans through word of mouth, Desjonquères said.

In Hart's case, Best Defense Foundation, a nonprofit dedicated to supporting military veterans, let the consulate know that Hart might be eligible for the award, she said.

A consulate employee reached out to Hart's family and began processing an application for Hart to receive the award. Each application undergoes a vet-

Duke Energy pledges $600,000 to fight hunger statewide, with local impact in Spartanburg

Duke Energy and its charitable foundation have launched a month-long campaign to help ease hunger across South Carolina, committing more than $600,000 to more than 60 food programs ahead of Thanksgiving.

The effort, which runs through Giving Tuesday, includes grant announcements, volunteer projects and a newly announced $100,000 contribution to the One SC Fund, activated by Gov. Henry McMaster to bolster food banks statewide.

Company officials say food insecurity remains a pressing concern, with an estimated 750,000 South Carolinians — about one in seven residents — lacking consistent access to nutritious meals. Children make up a significant portion of those affected.

While the campaign spans the state, the initiative is expected to bolster resources in the Upstate, including Spartanburg County, where local partners such as Harvest Hope Food Bank, FoodShare South Carolina and Mill Village Farms play an increasing role in meeting demand. Those organizations are among the partners Duke Energy plans to highlight throughout November.

Duke Energy kicked off the campaign Nov. 6 by joining Mill Village Farms, WYFF, Bon Secours Wellness Arena and roughly 200 volunteers in Greenville to bag nearly 50,000 pounds of sweet potatoes for Thanksgiving meal boxes. The produce will be distributed through FoodShare hubs and other feeding programs, including those serving Spartan-burg families.

The Duke Energy Foundation also awarded $105,000 to FoodShare

South Carolina organizations across its service territory, including $39,000 directed to Mill Village Farms.

“Our hope is by shining a light on these organizations, they will continue to receive the support they need to help address the real problem of hunger in our communities,” said Tim Pearson, Duke Energy’s South Carolina president. “They are fighting the good fight every day ... but now more than ever they cannot do it alone.” Residents looking for food assistance can visit SC211.org or text FOOD to 211211, a service launched by the United Way Association of South Carolina with early support from the Duke Energy Foundation. Duke Energy customers facing financial strain can also explore bill-payment resources at the company’s Seasonal Savings webpage.

The Duke Energy Foundation annually provides more than $30 million in philanthropic support in the communities the company serves.
